Meet the Heggenstaller Family

The unknowns that go into having your first baby are so vast when everything goes along with the plan. When complications are thrown into the mix, those unknowns increase dramatically. When our son Noah was born via an emergency c-section 8 years ago, we were left with so much uncertainty. All we knew is that our little baby was extremely sick, that he was being transferred to the NICU and that they were going to do everything they could for him. The emotions we experienced of being separated from our very sick newborn were incredibly intense! When a very special nurse came in the next morning and told me that she would start the process of discharging me so that I could be with my son, she also told me about the Ronald McDonald House. The feeling of relief that washed over my husband and I when we found out that we would be able to stay so close to our son is one that I will never forget. The Ronald McDonald House provided us with a sense of comfort and safety during such a scary time. We are forever grateful for the room, meals, and the incredible staff, volunteers, and donors that allowed us to place our focus solely on our son.
